The winds that once the Argo bore. Have died by Neptune's ruined shrines: And her hull is the drift of the deep sea-floor, Though shaped of Pelion's tallest pines. You may seek her crew on every isle. Fair in the feam of Ægean seas: But out of their rest no charm can wile Jason, and Orphous, and Hercules. And Priam's wail is heard no more By windy Ilion's sea built walls: Nor great Achilles, stained with gore. Shouts "O ye Gods! 'tis Hector falls!" On Ida's mount lies the shining snow. But Jove has gone from its brow away. And red on the plain the poppies grow WheretheGreekandtheTrojanfoughthatday. Mother Earth! are the Heroes dead? Do they thrill the soul of the years no more! Are the gleaming snows and the poppies red All that is left of the brave of yore? Are there none to fight as Theseus fought Far in the young world's misty dream? Or to teach as the gray-haired Nestor taught? Mother Earth! are the heroes gone? Gone? In a grander form they rise: Dead? We may clasp their hands in ours; And catch the light of their clearer eyes, And wreathetheir brows with immortal flower Wherever a noble deed is done 'Tis the pulse of a Hero's heart is stirred; Wherever Right has a triumph won Then are the Heroes' voices heard. Their armour rings on a fairer field Than the Greek and the Trojan fiercely trod For Freedom's sword is the blade they wield, And the light above is the smile of God. So in his isle of calm delight Jason may sleen the years away: For the Heroes live, and the sky is bright,

And the world is a braver world to day. The Maids of Merry England. (From the "Sunnyside Papers." I remember that the maids of merry England, who were privileged to listen to me sit around with their hands folded, and looked grave and solemn, as if it had been a sad truth that I was reminding them of. I don't thin! that there was any moral, to the effect that besuty was only skin deep, and was doomed to lade, and that fiesh, though fair, was only grass; but it was in that admonitory sense we took the sentiment, and it checked our levity, and made us all very seriously and solomnly happy. All me! those days of sentiment and flowered waistcoats are gone-gone, I fear, never to return. The sentiment, when I used to sing that song, was a mere formula. It was like singing about hearts of oak, Britannia, the ocean, and all that sort of thing It was not very new, it was not very true, and nobody cared particularly about the sentiment except as an excuse for singing a song. If it had been the hills or the vales or the back-

gardens of merry England, we should have equally taken it for granted that they were At the time of which I speak, not quite twenty years ago, the maids of merry England were not so beautiful as they are at the present time; at least, they were not so attractive. It was the time which immediately preceded the introduction of crinoline; shoes and sandals were i volue; leg of mutton sleeves and high waiste had gone out; but bonnets were still pokey, and the female figure was made up after the clockcase model, which we are led to believe ruled water frontage. "EVERYBODY SAYS."—We are just now wit nessing an unusual number of illustrations of the practical working of that most delusive excitement to practical action which may be described, in its own ordinary phrase, as "every-body says." The most obvious of these illustrations at the present moment is furnished by the change in what is called public opinion in the matter of Reform. By a wonderful process of conversion "everybody" is now convinced that Reform must be, and that without delay, and, moreover, that there are virtues in household suffrage never before dreamt of, and all through the operation of this mysterious agency. A small minority of the people have hitherto been energetically calling for Reform; but Mr. Bright has defied anti-Reformers to point out any large manifestations of opinion on the other side; and now on a sudden "everybody says" that Reform is a good thing, and the sooner we have it the better. Yet very few people have been deceived of Mr. Bright's assumption that a few regions of the second of the sec that a few scores of thousands necessarily represent the real political convictions of the country. Nevertheless the fallacy answers; there is nobody to prove the negative; and so each man has been looking at his neighbour, and talking of the uncomfortable state of affairs,—Pall Mall Gazette.
